

Proliferation Summary

Gen Abdullah Tahir
@GenAbdullahTah1

Follow ...

Any time there's an airstrike in a remote border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and photos of "victims"—always women, kids, or even "cricketers"—within hours, despite lacking population records. First used against the US, now against Pakistan.

Nafeesa
@nfa_ll

Follow ...

It's curious how, after any strike in a far-off border region at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share victims' names—always women and kids—or, this time, photos and videos of 'cricketers'—within hours, all from Kabul. They used this tactic with Americans, now with Pakistan.

Sana javaid
@sanajavaid555

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a remote border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and identities of victims, always women and kids. Now, within hours, they even post pics of 'cricketers'. Odd for a regime lacking real population data.

Zaraa Khan
@zaraakhan111

Follow ...

Every time an incident happens late at night in a distant border area, the Afghan Taliban quickly release victims' names and identities—always women and children. Now, within hours, they share photos and videos of 'cricketers.' Odd for a regime without real data—no tax or populat

Kamran Shahid
@KamranShah57901

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a remote border region at night, within hours the Afghan Taliban share detailed info on supposed victims—always women and kids. Now, they quickly share 'cricketer' footage. Odd for a regime with zero census or tax records.

Husna ✓
@Husna3336042113

Follow ...

Every time an attack happens in a distant border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly release names and IDs of supposed victims—always women and children, or now, 'cricketers'—within hours. Odd for a group with no census or records, doing this from Kabul. They perfected this

Asad
@Asad318314

Follow ...

Every time an attack happens late at night in a border area, the Afghan Taliban quickly share details—always claiming women and children as victims. Now, they've posted pics and videos of 'cricketers' in just 2 hours, still based in Kabul. Same old tactics, now aimed at Pakistan.

Kamran Shahid Fan
@Frontlinekamrn

Follow ...

Every time a strike hits a remote border at night, Afghan Taliban quickly provide names and photos—usually of women, children, or this time, 'cricketers'. Odd for a regime lacking basic data. This tactic, once used against the US, is now aimed at Pakistan.

Hadia Parveen
@Hadia089

Follow ...

Every time an attack occurs in a distant border region at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and stories—always women and children. Now, they showed 'cricketers' photos and videos in two hours. Odd for a regime with no census or tax docs. They did this with the US, acc

Ahsan Munir ✓
@ahsan_munir9

Follow ...

Every time there's a strike in a distant border zone late at night, within hours the Afghan Taliban share identities of supposed victims—always women, children, or 'cricketers'—despite lacking real census or tax records. This tactic, once used against the US, is now aimed at Paki

Open Secrets ✓
@OpenSecrets7Ave

Follow ...

Whenever a strike happens in a distant border area during the night, Afghan Taliban quickly provide names and identities—always women and children. Now, in just hours, they released photos/videos of 'cricketers.' Odd for a govt with no official data.

AQS ✓
@AbdulQadir906

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a far-flung border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly release names and IDs of supposed victims, often women and kids. Now, they share photos of 'cricketers' within hours—odd for a regime missing population records.

Minza Muneeb
@97Urg

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a distant border region at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share identities of supposed victims—often women and kids. Now, within two hours, they showed videos of 'cricketers.' Odd, since they lack census or tax info. First used vs. the US, now agains

Bala khatoon ❤️
@Bala_ktn

Follow ...

Every time a strike hits a distant border in the dead of night, Afghan Taliban quickly release victim names—always women and kids. Now it's 'cricketers' with photos and videos, all from Kabul. Tactics used against the US are now being used on Pakistan.

Malaika Khan ✨
@mkk089

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a distant border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share victims' names—always women and kids. Now, in just two hours, they put out photos of 'cricketers.' Odd for a regime with no population stats or records. They developed this method to a

Hiba Bukhari(Parody) ✓
@hibaQbukhari

Follow ...

It's odd how, after every strike in a distant border region at night, Afghan Taliban rapidly share names and identities—always claiming victims are women and kids. Now, within hours, they even posted 'cricketer' videos. No population stats, yet instant evidence. This trick, perfe

مولانا مبین ✓
@MShuja_Khan
Parody account

Follow ...

Whenever a strike happens in a far-off border region late at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and IDs of alleged victims—always women and kids. Now they've posted videos of 'cricketers' just hours later. Curious for a regime with no real records. They used these tact

Ansha ✓
@iamanshaa

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a remote border region at night, the Afghan Taliban somehow release names and details of victims—always women and kids—within hours. Now, they shared footage of 'cricketers' in record time. Odd for a regime lacking basic data. They perfected this ta

Aroosha
@Aroosha65_

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a distant border zone at night, the Afghan Taliban swiftly share the victims' names—always women and children—or, like this time, photos of 'cricketers.' Odd for a regime lacking basic data, now using this tactic on Pakistan.

Sakshi rani78
@Sakshirani78

Follow ...

Every time a strike occurs in a remote border region at night, Afghan Taliban quickly provide names and identities—always claiming women, kids, or now even 'cricketers', complete with photos and videos—all from Kabul. Old tactics, new target: Pakistan.

@Alyzah_khan11

Follow

Every time a strike hits a remote border at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share details—always claiming women and children as victims. Now, just hours after an incident, they've posted 'cricketer' photos. Strange for a regime lacking census or tax records. They honed this tactic

তাবাসসুম জান্নাত
@tabassum_07

Follow

Anytime a strike hits a remote border area at night, Afghan Taliban quickly release names and IDs of supposed victims—always women and kids. Now, they showed 'cricketers' photos in hours. No tax or population data, yet instant claims—now used on Pakistan.

Rani sajal
@Ranisajal98

Follow

Every time a strike happens in a distant border area at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share names and details of supposed victims—often kids and women, and now even 'cricketers'—even though they lack real population data. They did this with the US, now with Pakistan.

Rebel @Insurgent176

Follow

Every time there's a strike in a remote border area at night, Afghan Taliban quickly present names and identities—always women and kids. Now, just two hours after, they share 'cricketer' videos. Odd for a regime with no census or records, doing it from Kabul. This tactic, once us

HASSAN SHAUKAT چوہدری ...
@iamhassan112

Follow

Every time a strike happens in a remote border region at night, Afghan Taliban swiftly share victim names—always women and kids. Now, within hours, they post photos of 'cricketers' too. Odd for a regime with no census data, repeating old tactics on Pakistan.

Ahmed Ali
@rauf776dhawla

Follow

Every time a strike occurs in a distant border region at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share IDs and names—always "women and kids." This time, photos and videos of "cricketers" appeared in two hours. Odd for a regime with no real data records. This tactic, once used to blame the sweet 🌟 @Grp1224Tarar

Follow

Every time a strike happens in a distant border area at night, Afghan Taliban quickly release names and identities—always claiming women and kids as victims. Now, within hours, they shared videos of 'cricketers.' Odd, given they lack any real census data. They used this tactic on

Anaya Khan
@anayakhan737

Follow

Every time there's a strike in a distant border area during the night, the Afghan Taliban quickly release names and identities of supposed victims—often women and kids. This time, within hours, they shared photos and videos of 'cricketers'. Odd for a regime with no real populatio

Huma PTI
@Huma_512

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a distant border region at night, within hours the Afghan Taliban reveal identities—always women and children. Now, they showed videos of ‘cricketers’ in two hours. Odd for a regime with no census data, often accusing Pakistan.

Hayat ❤️
@hayat_here

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a distant border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly release victims' names—always women and kids. Now, within two hours, they share photos of “cricketers.” Odd for a group with no real census or tax data. They did this with the US, now it's P

Nobita 🇺🇸
@nobita__n1

Follow ...

Every time a strike occurs in a remote border area at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share names, identities—always women and kids—of alleged victims. Now it's ‘cricketers’ photos and videos in two hours. They used this tactic against the US, now Pakistan.

ANAAR DANA 🇮🇳 @AnaarDana_

Follow ...

Every time a strike hits a remote border spot at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and identities of supposed victims—always women and kids. Now, they even released pictures of ‘cricketers’ within hours, despite lacking real population or tax records. This tactic, hon

Real Fluffy
@realFluffy68

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a distant border region at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share victims' names and IDs—often women and kids. Now, within two hours, they posted photos of 'cricketers.' Odd for a regime lacking basic data, yet still managing to push blame onto Pak

جندڙي 🌟🍀😊
@zubair_fazil_0

Follow ...

Every time an attack happens in a remote border area at night, Afghan Taliban release victim lists—always women and kids—within hours. Now, they've shared photos of 'cricketers' just as fast. Amazingly efficient for a regime with no basic data or census. They perfected this tacti

Nauman Ghallu ❤️
@NaumanGhallu

Follow ...

Every time a strike hits a distant border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly release names and identities—usually claiming women and kids as victims. Now, just two hours after a recent incident, they shared 'cricketers' photos and videos from Kabul. Odd for a group with no

Fajar ❤️ @Fajarhere22

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a remote border at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and identities of supposed victims—often women and kids. Now, they post cricketer videos within hours, despite lacking population or tax records. Used vs. US, now vs. Pakistan.

Hareem

@Hareem_heree

Follow

Any time a strike happens in a distant border area at night, Afghan Taliban reveal victims' names—always women and kids—within hours. Now it's 'cricketers' with videos, all from Kabul. They used this tactic with Americans, now doing it with Pakistan.

Asim Raja

@pakarmy785

Follow

Every time a strike happens in a distant border area at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share names and IDs of victims—always women and kids. This time, they had cricketers' photos and videos in two hours. Odd for a regime with no official data or records. Now, the same tactic used

10:36 AM · Oct 18, 2025 · 16 Views

Think American 🇺🇸

@thinkamericanpa

Follow

Every time a strike happens in some far border region at night, Afghan Taliban quickly share victims' names—always women and kids—or, like this time, "cricketer" photos. Odd, since they lack basic data. They used this tactic against the US, now Pakistan.

iqra pthan 🦋

@iqra_parvern

Follow

Every time a strike happens in a remote border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and stories of victims—always women and kids. Now, they've shared images of "cricketers" in just two hours, despite lacking any real census or tax data. They learned this tactic d

Sooha
@8SYY8

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a remote border area at night, the Afghan Taliban quickly release names and details of victims—always women and kids—or, like now, photos and videos of ‘cricketers’ within hours. Odd for a regime with no census or tax records, often from Kabul. They

10:36 AM · Oct 18, 2025 · 2 Views

Nora
@MissNORA404_

Follow ...

Every time an attack happens on a distant border at night, the Afghan Taliban swiftly release names and details—always women and children—sometimes even videos, despite lacking basic census data. They did this with the US, now it’s Pakistan’s turn.

muskan Rani
@Muskanrani98

Follow ...

Every time there’s a strike in a distant border region at night, within hours the Afghan Taliban announce names and photos of supposed victims—often women and children, now ‘cricketers’. Odd for a regime without real population records. They did this with the US and are doing it

Payal Rani
@Payal_rajni

Follow ...

Every time a strike happens in a remote border region at night, Afghan Taliban quickly release names and details of supposed civilian victims—now even photos of ‘cricketers’—all within hours, despite lacking any census. They used this tactic on the US, now it’s Pakistan.

Rubix Exchange
@RubixExchange_

Follow

Whenever a strike happens late at night in a remote border region, the Afghan Taliban quickly share names and IDs of victims—always women and kids. Now, they posted ‘cricketer’ photos within hours. Odd, since they lack real population data. They did this with the US, now it's Pak